2.4.2 Percentage of full time teachers with NET/SET/SLET/Ph.D./D.M./M.Ch./D.N.B Superspeciality/D.Sc. /D.Litt. during the last year five years (consider only highest degree for count)

The appointment of full-time teachers with Ph.D. degrees is a significant achievement and indicates the institute's commitment to quality education and research. Teachers with Ph.D. degrees are better equipped to guide students and impart research skills and knowledge.

The appointment of full-time teachers with Ph.D. degrees marks a significant milestone, reflecting the institute's dedication to high-quality education and research. Faculty members with advanced degrees are exceptionally qualified to mentor students, imparting both research skills and in-depth knowledge.

Additionally, fostering a culture where faculty is encouraged to pursue Ph.D. studies and engage in research projects is a commendable strategy. This approach not only broadens the expertise of the faculty but also enhances the overall educational and research output of the institute.

Furthermore, instilling a research-oriented mindset in students and encouraging them to consider research careers within the industry are crucial for the institute's growth. Research in higher education institutions drives innovation, contributes to solving real-world problems, and prepares students for leadership roles in their fields. By prioritizing research, the institute not only elevates its academic standing but also actively contributes to the advancement of knowledge and societal development.
